It's part of a Minnesota Judicial Branch initiative that court officials say will make it easier for attorneys and judges to file and view documents, conserve staff resources and make courts more accessible to the public. "We understand that the public — the people we serve — do their banking online, they do their doctoring online, they do their shopping online," Minnesota Supreme Court Chief Justice Lorie Gildea told the News Tribune this week. "They expect to do their courtwork online and use technology to facilitate their interactions with the court system." Northland courts prepare to go paperless By Tom Olsen, Duluth News Tribune and Forum Communications Company on Oct 9, 2015 at 11:44 p.m.

More technology won't address what Rysavy described as a people issue in the number of court employees. In other words, the move isn't likely to drastically speed up business at courthouses. "A trial is still going to take two weeks if it was going to take two weeks before," Rysavy said. Courts brace for paperless system Published 11:57am Monday, January 30, 2012 By Jason Schoonover, Austin Daily Herald.

Dear Terry Dean, Nemmers:

I understand that you would like a copy of the audio tape made by the University of Minnesota-Morris police during interviews about Northstar newspapers.

The Minnesota Government Data Practices Act, §13.03(2) states that "If a person requests copies or electronic transmittal of the data to the person, the responsible authority may require the requesting person to pay the actual costs of searching for and retrieving government data, including the cost of employee time, and for making, certifying, and electronically transmitting the copies of the data or the data, but may not charge for separating public from not public data." The cost of producing the audio tape you have requested is $43.50. This includes employee time and equipment. I have attached an invoice for your records.

If you would like a copy of the audio tape, please send a check, made out to the University of Minnesota, to the address below. Once payment is received, the audio file will be sent to you.

Sincerely,

Susan McKinney, CRM
